In this documentary about nontraditional families and loving relationships, four gay Canadian men share their stories. Viewers meet Steve, a patent lawyer during the week and a full-time weekend dad when he helps co-parents two girls, the daughters of a lesbian couple, one of whom is his ex-wife. Scott is single and raising twins born of a surrogate mother. Finally, Randy and Drew talk about their lives together as a gay married couple and the challenges and responsibilities they face as fathers of an adopted baby. Scenes of the men enjoying parenting time, interacting with family and loved ones, and commenting on what it means to be dads in a world that hasn't quite accepted them as parents make a compelling argument in favor of gay parenting and child-rearing diversity. Bonus features include interviews with other gay fathers and a question-and-answer session with the director and others.
